DETAILED ACTION

Election/Restrictions

1. Applicant's election with traverse of Group I in the reply filed on 10/17/05 is acknowledged. The traversal is on the grounds that the restriction is not proper since both groups of claims contain corresponding limitations such that the product of group I is made using the methods recited in group II claims. This is not found persuasive because the method claims, particularly claims 13-16 and 26, recite additional method steps not inherent in the product claims 1-10 and 17-22.

The requirement is still deemed proper and is therefore made FINAL.

Claims 1-10 and 17-22 are pending, with claims 11-16 and 23-26 withdrawn.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

2. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

3. Claims 1-3, 6-10, and 17 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Cho (U.S. 6,119,273) in view of Knowles (U.S. 4,170,808). Cho discloses the invention substantially as claimed. Cho teaches headgear comprising a head strap 1 for adjusting circumference of the headgear about a person's head, and a buckle 2 through which the strap extends for securing the strap at an adjusted position. However, Cho doesn't teach a brass buckle, or a display layer positioned on an outer surface of the buckle and having at least one color different from that of the buckle and a sealant layer deposited over the display layer and surface of the buckle so as to minimize exposure of the display layer to environmental conditions. Knowles teaches a buckle with a display layer 22 positioned on an outer surface 20 of the buckle and having at least one color different from that of the buckle, and a sealant layer 32, formed from distilled water or other conventional types of sealing additives, deposited over the display layer and surface of the buckle. Figure 1 shows the display layer with shaded areas, indicating darker colors are used in those areas. It is implied in Knowles' disclosure that the sealant layer is transparent, since the display layer 22 remains visible. Column 3, lines 50-52 teaches that a dye layer (paint) may be applied to the surface 20. Official Notice is taken that buckles are commonly made from brass since it is a commonly used non-ferrous, metallic alloy material known for its resilient, hard properties. Applicant's specification also states on pg. 5, par. 20 that brass buckles are commercially available. Therefore, it would have been obvious to provide Cho with the display layer and sealant as taught by Knowles, since it has been shown that providing buckles with decorative ornamentation is a common way of improving aesthetic properties of fasteners and conveying a particular effect.

4. Claims 4, 5, and 18-22 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Cho in view of Knowles as applied to claim 1 above, and further in view of Reiter (U.S. 1,989,153). Cho, when viewed with Knowles, discloses the invention substantially as claimed. However, Cho doesn't teach an embossed pattern. Reiter teaches a buckle with a portion embossed (lines 40-44) with a desired decoration. Therefore, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to provide the decorative assembly of Cho/Knowles with the embossed pattern of Reiter, since this particular manipulation of a metallic buckle is known and common in the art and lends a tactile property to the buckle.

Conclusion

5. The prior art made of record on the attached PTO-892, and not relied upon, is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure.
